About us

The Scottish Community Foundation is an expert in charitable giving. Every year, we give away £4M on behalf of our clients, making us one of Scotland's busiest grant-makers. Our clients choose to support exceptional community based charities and projects across the country. Using our in-depth knowledge of the charitable sector, they can be sure their giving has the greatest and most positive local impact. To date, we've awarded over £20M to projects across Scotland.

Our clients include private donors, companies, charitable trusts and statutory bodies. We also distribute funds for BIG Lottery, Comic Relief and the Scottish Government. They all give because they want to help improve life for people living in Scotland. Some of our clients choose to give to a specific area of Scotland, while others choose to support projects tackling certain issues.

With over 250 charitable funds, we can support a broad range of themes, including:

- rural isolation
- urban deprivation
- unemployment
- environmental issues

We're also keen to support projects aiming to:

- improve the health and wellbeing of local residents
- provide training and education opportunities.

Our grant-making is also made possible by our two annual fundraising events, the Caledonian Challenge and Caledonian 100. Through the Caledonian Challenge, 14,000 walkers have raised a total of £11M which has been distributed by the Scottish Community Foundation. If you would like to find out more about these events, visit www.caledonianchallenge.com and www.caledonian100.com

A large part of the Foundation's grant-making involves making grants of a few thousand pounds to small community groups, working at the grassroots to build and maintain strong communities. Often volunteer-run, or with just one or two paid employees, these small groups can make a small grant go a long way.

Title:	Volunteer Assessor
Hours:	Approximately 2-3 hours per week (including evening and weekends)
Reports to:	Volunteer Assessors are supported by the Grant Programmes team led by the Grants Programme Manager
Location:	From home

ROLE PURPOSE AND OVERVIEW

We always receive more applications than we have funds to support. We can generally only fund 50% of the projects that apply, but we are working hard to increase the amount of available funds year-on-year.

To make sure we target our limited resources to the most effective projects run by the most committed and well-organised groups, we assess applications. This involves not only scrutinising the application form, but also contacting the applicant to learn more about their group and their project. We know that applicants value this opportunity to talk to someone directly, and not have to rely only on what they've written in their application. This is particularly true for first time applicants.

Following this process, the assessor compiles a short report which is then considered by our Grants Committee, which meets every two months to decide which projects to support. The committee relies on our assessors to consider all aspects of the applications, and make a fair and considered judgement on the relative merits of each request.

WORKING WITH US

The Foundation has worked with volunteer assessors since it was founded in 1996. Originally, this was essential since we couldn't afford more than a few staff, but it's become a tradition we've maintained because we feel it reflects what we're all about.

We know that our applicants – who are usually volunteers too – are often pleased to know that the assessor they are speaking to is also a volunteer. Having Assessors outside Scotland's two main cities also demonstrates that we are genuinely here for the whole of Scotland and in touch with the needs of rural, urban, Highland, Lowland and Central Belt communities.

Of course, having volunteers on the Grant Programmes team helps us to process more applications. We are a charity too, so we're keen to maximise the amount of its income that gets distributed as grants rather than paying for administration costs.

WORKING WITH US

Our volunteer assessors are very much be part of our Grant Programmes team. We're looking for a team of dedicated people who will add value to our already successful grants programmes.

With our support, training and guidance, we are looking to recruit volunteers who can regularly assess applications. The average assessment takes 2-3 hours to complete, so we're looking for volunteers who can:

- carry out about 30 assessments per year
- attend three training meeting per year
- commit to be a volunteer assessor for at least a year.

We appreciate how precious your time is, so we can work around your holidays, and other times that you might not be available to carry out assessments.

We provide volunteer assessors with:

- initial and ongoing training in grant assessment
- an Assessors Handbook, supplemented by additional guidance notes and briefing papers on themes or issues of relevance to our work
- link you to a network of other assessors and Grant Programmes staff
- provide a dedicated point of contact within the team for enquiries or assistance
- give you regular feedback on your assessments and the outcome of the applications you've assessed
- conduct an annual appraisal to hear your thoughts on ways of improving our grant-making and supporting your work as an Assessor
- create opportunities for you to visit projects we've funded.
- expenses reimbursed at a rate of £3 per assessment

We also hope that some assessors will be interested in researching issues affecting communities in Scotland and produce reports, briefings and policy suggestions for assessors, staff and the Grants Committee.

All together, we intend the role of assessor to represent a fulfilling opportunity to support and influence the work of the Foundation, and potentially a valuable personal development opportunity.
